(Discipleship Lesson 19)

Read the entire lesson and then answer the questions that follow.

All my life I had searched for God, tried to find Him, tried to prove to myself that He was real. I was born of Christian-raised parents, but was not taken to church as a child. During my junior high years, I felt something inside calling me to a Christian fellowship. Drifting from a liberal, do-good-feel-good Congregational Church, to a Quaker Silent Meeting, to a high Episcopal Church – I was looking for something outside of me...something I could take to fill the emptiness in me...a place with religious people where I could participate in activities and earn my own salvation. I was content to have the Bible quoted to me and interpreted in the sermon – it was there if I ever needed it. I never did. It was not a book I went to, even though I commonly read other philosophical, ideological, or self-help books.

As an adult, I was always too busy to go to church. I thought I could make a commitment on my own to do good in the world. In my career, I was making a difference to people, and I was “making the world a better place.” That was enough.

But, of course, it never was. I didn’t see that my life was all about me. At one point in my marriage, my wife and I connected briefly with a Presbyterian Church – we felt the loneliness in our very busy lives, the lack of true intimacy between us, and, as it turns out, with God. We knew that we lacked something very deeply foundational while trying to raise our children. In fact, it was our daughter at age ten who said to us, “I want to know God better.” God led us to join a Christian Church where we discovered the joy of worship and praise, and we began studying the Bible and praying regularly.

The world opened up in a new way, but I still felt such a deep longing, such a wide separation from God. I continued to hold on to, not only a lifetime of sin, but my Secret Life. Here I was, a husband, a teacher, a respected community leader – I had all the things of life: a beautiful home, a cabin in the mountains, an antique car collection – and now it seemed I finally had “religion.” But as I prayed in church each Sunday, I knew I would go out during the coming week and engage in my sexual addiction/sexual offending. The touch I justified as “lovingly helpful” to “encourage” my students to do great things was in fact for my own selfish, deviant sexual pleasure. The more I tried to stop myself – the more I tried to make myself clean – the further down I fell. One day, in tears and on my knees, I truly went to God – differently this time, not demanding “take this from me,” as I had so often in the past, but humbly appealing for mercy. “God, show me what to do. I will do anything.” I prayed that same prayer again in church the following day. And as I meant it, I could feel that He had heard – and that He would answer. It was that very day that a victim of my abuse told a family member.

Arrested soon after, utterly disgraced publicly in a high profile “media event,” and only by the grace of God, rescued from suicide and led instead to a treatment center, I was broken. In county jail I was despised by the other inmates, and I truly feared for my safety. Never had I been so low, felt so worthless. Still, I clung to my Bible and went to services daily. But I just knew that God “couldn’t really” forgive me for what I had done.

One night in the very hour of the depth of my despair, I met another inmate named Manuel. Only later did I realize the significance of his name, which comes from Emmanuel, "God with us." For the next two days we spent every free moment talking and reading the Bible, walking in the yard. The first time I met him he said to me, "I don't know why I am here. They say I violated my probation, but I am not on probation – and the person they say is my probation officer is on vacation." Well, you hear a lot of stories in jail....

Finally, the man was approached by other inmates and told to stay away from me because of my crime. I didn't see him for an entire day. He later said he had stayed in his cell and prayed. When he came out the next evening, he came directly to me. Sitting in a corner of the day-room – both of us afraid of others' reactions but apparently protected by God – we talked and prayed. It was that night that I knew – really in my heart for the first time – that not only could I be forgiven, but that Christ had in fact already paid for my sin almost 2000 years before I'd committed it! I had only to accept His sacrifice.

And that night Manuel told me of the sexual abuse he had suffered as a child at the hands of his brother, how he'd denied it all his life and never talked to anyone about it, how it had affected him, and how it had kept a wall between himself and intimacy with God. As we cried and laughed together, we realized that God was changing both of us.

The next morning when I was let out of my cell to the day-room, I went looking for Manuel. He was gone.

"It's strange," the sergeant responded to my asking for Manuel, "He wasn't supposed to be here. Some kind of error. They even released him in the middle of the night last night. I've never seen that happen before."

I knew why he was there and Who had sent him. And it had nothing to do with the justice system. It had to do with the eternal lives of two of Abba Father's adopted children. Praise God. That day was July 19th, my daughter's birthday – and my re-birthday.
